THE BECCA LAW

- ◆ Protecting Children
- ◆ Supporting Parents
- ◆ Strengthening Families
- ◆ Keeping Children in School

Truancy

Schools must file a truancy petition with Juvenile Court when a child has seven unexcused absences in a month, or ten in a school year, and the parent has been notified.

Juvenile Court will inform the child and parents that a petition has been filed and direct them to work with the school to correct the attendance problem.

Should those efforts fail, Juvenile Court will order the child to attend school and participate in services to reduce barriers to regular school attendance.

The parent can also be ordered to send their child to school and participate in services to ensure regular school attendance.

At-Risk Youth (ARY)

Parents may petition Juvenile Court to order their child to remain at home when:

- ◆ The child is younger than age 18
- ◆ The child has been absent from home, without parental permission, for more than 72 hours
- ◆ The child's behavior is beyond the parent's control and endangers the health, safety, or welfare of the child or another person
- ◆ The child has a serious substance abuse or mental health problem
- ◆ Families have made an effort to remedy the problem through means such as counseling

Both children and parents can be ordered by Juvenile Court to attend counseling, classes, and other measures to reduce family conflict.

which should be nurtured..."

Children in Need of Services (CHINS)

Children, parents, or a DCFS social worker may petition Juvenile Court to approve an out-of-home placement when the conflict between parent and child is so severe the family cannot remain intact. Placement may occur with supervision from Juvenile Court with:

- ◆ A relative
- ◆ An appropriate friend or neighbor
- ◆ DCFS

The legal parent/guardian may be financially responsible for the cost of the placement.

Juvenile Court will order certain conditions the child and parent must comply with including attending classes, counseling, and other measures to reunite the family.
